Markets Fight for Public Against Price Hikes, Claim

The markets are fighting the public's battle as well as their own by resisting exorbitant and unreasonable union pay demands, a spokesman said here today.

Robert K. Fox, president of the Food Employers Council, declared following a mass meeting of market owners at the Hotel Statler, that owner resistance to the union is stiffening and more stores are joining those fighting the union strike.

"These men were compelled by the managers of the Retail Clerks Union and their malicious strike tactics to close their doors against their friends, the public, whose trade is their economic lifeblood," Fox said.

"They're rightly angry and prepared to fight to the finish."

Fox admitted that the markets are suffering enormous economic losses by being forced to close while competitors who are open are enjoying a sales "field day" and in many reported cases even profiting through marked up prices.

"The public has a right to know," Fox said. "that the closed markets are fighting an enemy common to the housewife and themselves, higher food and operating costs that unreasonable and inflationary wage increases produce."

"The markets that are open, except for the 'mama and papa' stores, are operating by sufferance and permission."

and are being used as an economic weapon to force their fellow owners into submission.

"These people are profiting from an economic war that their fellow market owners are waging against a common enemy of the housewife, higher costs, and should be exposed as such."
